TEXANS are increasingly turning to the stars for guidance and to get answers through this uncertain period, a new study finds.

A study of 50,000 US adults conducted by medium and psychic online experience platform, mediumchat.com, has discovered that more than 1 in 3 Texans (39%) regularly consult their horoscopes to find out what the universe has in store for them on a certain day.

The findings follow the announcement from mediumchat.com of a 131% increase in horoscope inquiries since the start of state lockdowns.

The study also found that over 1 in 5 millennials (23%) had considered looking for a new job because their horoscope suggested it may be a good idea. Existing fans of astrology will know that different star signs are believed to be more compatible than others.

The research also revealed that 32% of US women have previously looked up a potential partner's star sign to see if it was compatible with their own.

Diana Davies of mediumchat.com, comments: "People have been using astrology for guidance since before the Babylonian times, where the direction and movements of the moon, sun and stars were first tracked and recorded in detail."

"Amidst the troubles of the pandemic, astrology can provide a means of comforting and guiding us through uncertainty and the unknown. We know that Gemini's can find decision-making difficult so for those born under this star sign the wisdom of astrology should be highly beneficial."
